

Food from around the world

Hi! My name's Steve and I'm from Durban, in South Africa. My favourite traditional South African food is bobotie. The main ingredient of bobotie is spicy minced meat. Some people put dried fruit, for example raisins, with the meat. On top of the meat, we put some bread with milk and eggs. The mixture is baked in the oven and then we serve it with walnuts or slices of banana.

Hello from the USA! My name's Finn, and I love hot dogs! It's a kind of sausage which is served in a sliced bun. In the USA, you can eat hot dogs in fast food restaurants, but they're also a really popular street food. Many people eat hot dogs when they go to baseball games. You can also get grilled hot dogs at local grocery stores. The 7-Eleven store sells 100 million hot dogs every year!

Hi! I'm Nicole, and I'm from Quebec in Canada. There is a traditional fast food dish from Quebec called poutine, and I love it! Poutine is made with French fries* and cheese curds. Then a light gravy is poured over the top of it. There are lots of different versions of poutine. Some people don't use cheese curds, they use mozzarella cheese. Others like to add special toppings, for example, bacon or chicken. But I prefer the original dish. It's delicious!

* French fries is American English for chips

I'm Becky and my home is in Sydney, Australia. In the 18th century, when European settlers first came to Australia, they often spent many weeks away from home. They didn't have ovens, of course, and so they cooked bread over a campfire. This bread is called damper.

It's made with flour and water and a little salt. You can bake it in the hot ashes of a campfire or in your fireplace at home.
